

What are the benefits of teaching abroad?

Besides the life-changing experience of learning to live and work in another culture, many teachers find that they are better off financially and professionally when working abroad. Salaries vary widely based on region, type of school and cost of living but employment packages often include money-saving extras such as:

- Round trip flights or allowances
- Tax free or low tax salaries *
- End of contract bonuses *
- Free housing or subsidies *
- Medical coverage

...And more

In addition, you enjoy small class sizes, professional development and relocation support.

How can I increase my chances of finding a teaching job abroad?

Every year thousands of teachers make the choice to work abroad in private, international schools. From Cairo to Shanghai to Moscow to Botswana; international English-speaking schools exist wherever you find western expatriates living and working abroad. You will also find that the host nationals wish to have their children enrolled in these schools to benefit from an international education. With vast differences in curricula, visa requirements, pay and benefits, many teachers find the process of finding a job abroad daunting.

So why not let the experts at teachanywhere help you find your dream job abroad? Staffed mainly by ex-teachers with international experience, the recruitment team at Teachanywhere is passionate about international education and can provide valuable guidance and support every step of the way.

"You have provided us with many excellent teachers over the past two years and your prompt, professional and personal customer service is second to none."
EW, Principal, International school in China

Most of our posts are in overseas primary and secondary schools that teach all or most subjects in English. With requirements that are similar to state schools at home, most of our clients require the following:

- Teacher training such as a Bachelors of Education, or a non-Education related Bachelors degree plus teacher training such as a Post Graduate Certificate in Education, or Masters of Education.
- Good, recent, verifiable teaching references and a clean criminal record check.
- Experience teaching in one of the following countries: UK, Ireland, US, Canada, Australia or New Zealand.
- Experience of teaching children for whom English is not the first language is usually helpful but a TEFL certificate is not usually required.
- Many schools prefer teachers with at least 2 years of recent, relevant experience though some will consider Newly qualified teachers and those with 1 year of post-qualification experience.

Successful international teachers must possess a combination of personal resiliency, flexibility and professional competency. Open-mindedness, both in terms of cultural sensitivity as well as open mindedness about the type of school and locations considered is also paramount. Open minded teachers who take the time to understand the culture, cost of living and lifestyle of a new location are more easily placed. The length of experience is also a factor. A majority of schools require at least 2 years of recent, relevant post-qualification teaching experience, and some expect even more, but teachanywhere can help to place teachers who are newly qualified provided they are flexible in terms of location preference. Finally, because housing is often provided by the school, teachers who have dependent families or spouses must be matched to jobs that offer suitable employment packages, which can further limit choices.

Let teachanywhere help guide you towards the region and job that is right for you.

"I have to commend you and your company on your professionalism, not to mention your caring personal touch. It is so refreshing to deal with people who have such a disposition towards teachers, not to see us as merely a means to an end." GM, English teacher
